

Motivating and Delegating

Use Motivation and Delegation To Create A More Effective Team!

Length: 1 Day

Summary: Motivation is often the most difficult concept for a manager to adopt in practice. In this course you will examine the concepts of motivation and delegation. You will learn what motivates your workforce and how to delegate without micromanaging or abdicating responsibility. Creating an environment that helps others feel motivated to fully engage in their work is one of the most important contributions a leader can make. Highly motivated employees are more productive, more creative, and more focused on achieving quality results for themselves and their organizations.

In this course, you will consider your motivation and the role of motivation in leading others. You will investigate intrinsic and extrinsic motivation sources and learn to bring out motivation in yourself and others in order to fully engage in the work of the team or organization.
